Croatia is already surprising for its strange shape. The arc that the country represents is explained by history and the very specific issues that make Croatia rich and diverse today. The country combines a long coastline with one of the largest concentrations of islands in the world, marked by the Mediterranean context and the continental Pannonian plains closely linked to the Austro-Hungarian plains. These two sets of landscapes are delimited by the Julian Alps to the north and the Dinaric ranges that descend to Greece. Whether on the coast or in the plains, the Croats have always been a people of traders benefiting from their position at the crossroads of multiple trade routes, often dating back to Antiquity and even further in the past. The city of Trogir was the site of an ancient Greek colony. The Roman heritage is best linked to the city of Split, where the city center is located within the walls of Emperor Diocletian's palace, which has been recreated throughout history to form a constantly bubbling magma of architectural styles. The tumultuous medieval past is evident in the Venetian influences on the coast with the cities of Zadar and Šibenik and the Austrian influences inland. Croatia's strategic position and wealth have aroused envy. All the joy and melancholy of the country can be found in this highly original naive art, typical of the plains, or the finesse of the sculpture of the Dalmatian stonemasons who would surpass themselves, generating true artistic revolutions such as the Radovan Portal in Trogir or the Šibenik Cathedral created by George the Dalmatian. And amidst these comings and goings, the small Republic of Dubrovnik is developing an extraordinary city-state imbued with typical art and architecture, jealously guarding its freedom with extraordinary diplomacy. Crossing Croatia means discovering a wide variety of landscapes and terroirs that are constantly changing, nurturing original, strong identities, shaped by all the influences that have marked them. This journey will transport you through the discovery of pearls of nature on the islands or in the plateaus with the Plitvice Lakes National Park... A richness that also flatters the palate because it translates into an appetizing diversity of culinary specialties. From the Mediterranean maritime scents to the gentle sounds of waterfalls... for a total pleasure of the senses!
